Leveraging the FFPSA for Older Youth: 3 Part Series by the ABA

Prevention Provisions

This three-part series—comprised of this article on prevention provisions and ones on reduction of group care provisions and improving transitions—takes a close look at how the FFPSA can be leveraged to bring benefit to older youth and suggests strategies to ensure that plans for implementation of the law keep older youth as a priority and that the youth are not lost in the immense efforts to implement all provisions of the law.

Reduction of Group Care Provisions

This is the second of three articles on how the Family First Prevention Services Act (FFPSA) might be leveraged to the benefit of older youth. In addition to increasing investments in prevention services so youth and families do not enter the system in the first place, the FFPSA seeks to limit the use of group care by restricting the use of Title IV-E funds for group settings.

Improving Transitions

This is the third of three articles—here are the first and second—on how the Family First Prevention Services Act (FFPSA) might be leveraged to the benefit of older youth. The FFPSA seeks to respond to the transition needs of young people, recognizing that, in general, the transition to adulthood requires significant support and does not occur until a young person is in their mid-20s. The FFPSA also recognizes that successful transitions should begin early. To achieve these ends, the FFPSA expands the ages and time periods for which youth can be served. The following are some of the key changes.

Family First Implications for Youth Homelessness

This paper explores how Family First can be leveraged as one of the tools to address homelessness for youth and young adults involved in the foster care system. Family First offers important new options to prevent young people's entry into foster care and to challenge states to use congregate care only as a last resort — a short-term intervention to meet young people's treatment needs. While the Family First Act was not designed to address youth homelessness, there are aspects of the new law that could help fund services for these young people, prevent some of its root causes, and provide a stronger foundation for collaboration between child welfare, runaway and homeless youth providers, and other youth-serving systems.

A Historic Opportunity to Reform the Child Welfare System: Youth & Alumni Priorities on Older Youth Successful Transition to Adulthood

It is the authors' intent by including the outlined priorities to engage youth at an earlier age to enhance successful outcomes that are critical for youth to thrive. Throughout this statement, the authors outline opportunities for engagement to implement or further these priorities. This engagement may include opportunities for stakeholders, service providers and agency administration. The purpose is to emphasize the critical role of young people with lived experience in moving towards a 21st Century Child Welfare System.

Family-Based Residential Treatment Director of Residential Substance Use Disorder Treatment Programs for Parents with Children

Volunteers of America, with support from Annie E. Casey, created a directory of residential substance use disorder treatment programs that have program models for parents and children in the same treatment facility to ensure that child welfare agencies and the public at large are aware of the residential family treatment programs that are currently available.

Comparison of Federal Requirements for Qualified Residential Treatment Programs (QRTP) and Psychiatric Residential Treatment Facilities (PRTF)

Building Bridges Initiative, with support from Annie E. Casey foundation, produced a comparison document to help with addressing questions on the differences, similarities and connections between new Family First-defined Quality Residential Treatment Programs (QRTP) & Psychiatric Residential Treatment Facilities (PRTF). It is a quick comparative reference of the federal requirements of the QRTPs and the PRTFs to help states, providers, families, youth, advocates and other residential stakeholders understand what the similarities and differences are between the two. It must be noted that this document is not meant to identify residential intervention best practices, but rather outline the different federal requirements for QRTPs and PRTFs.

Prevention Services Clearinghouse

Federal Title IV-E Prevention Services Clearinghouse

The Title IV- E Prevention Services Clearinghouse was established by the Administration for Children and Families (ACF) within the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to conduct an objective and transparent review of research on programs and services intended to provide enhanced support to children and families and prevent foster care placements. The clearinghouse rates programs and services as well-supported, supported, promising, or does not currently meet criteria. This site allows you to search for specific programs.
